PURPOSE:

The purpose of this course is to provide an introduction to Family Systems Theory. The intent is to introduce students to the most prominent contemporary systems of therapy. This course will thus provide the foundation for further course work in Family Systems Therapies. Students are expected to read critically some of the original source materials summarized in the text, paying particular attention to basic assumptions and the methodologies derived from them. Further, the course will provide an opportunity for evaluating the various theoretical approaches by comparison with biblical/theological concepts of family and family function. The structure of the course will include lecture/discussion, group and individual presentations and appropriate video materials.

COURSE OBJECTIVES -

1. To develop an understanding and appreciation for the history and development of Family Systems Theory.

2. To review major contemporary theoretical formulations and to critique these theories on the basis of biblical-theological declarations about the nature of the human family.

3. To develop an appreciation for the therapeutic implications of the various major theoretical approaches.

4. To review current trends and develop an understanding for the direction of future research and development in the field of Family Therapy.

READING REQUIREMENTS -

Thomas W. Blume. Becoming a Family Counselor: A Bridge to Family Therapy.

Recommended Reading - Two books listed in the Bibliography are of particular significance:

Read approximately 1500 pages, not including the textbook. Keep a reading log that is due on April 20th, 2009.

WRITTEN WORK REQUIREMENTS -

1. Beginning with the third week of class each student will prepare a three page paper that will summarize and evaluate each of the theories presented.

   A brief statement of the basic assumptions of the theory, the major implications for therapy and the leading proponents for the utilization of the theory along with your own personal reflections on the adequacy of the theory from the perspective of a Christian practitioner.

   Each of these papers is due one per week from weeks three through eight.

2. A final 10 page paper in which each student will take a particular theoretical approach and write an extensive critique including assumptions, methods and techniques. Such questions as - "Does this theory have an appropriate balance in its design?" - "How does this theoretical formulation square with the clear Biblical/Theological understanding of the nature of persons, families and function?" - "How do I personally find the theory to be appealing to me as a practitioner?"

   Appropriate bibliographic support is expected. This last paper is due the last day of class. April 20th, 2009.
